article_group_1 A Glimmer of Hope in America's Opioid Crisis

Duluth, MN -- Twelve hours into her 35th birthday last fall, Janelle and a friend found what they were looking for: heroin.

"The first shot of the day, it killed me," Janelle said. "I was dead for three minutes, and they got me back with Narcan."

Her friend called 911, and two police squad cars arrived within minutes. The officers administered three nasal shots of the overdose antidote, generically known as naloxone, to revive her.

Addiction to powerful painkillers sneaked up on Janelle, a mother of two from the Duluth area, who began taking the drugs legitimately for pain, but like millions of others, got caught up in the worst opioid epidemic in U.S. history.

There were a record-breaking 70,237 drug overdose deaths in 2017 and opioids were involved in 67.8% of them, according to the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

But national opioid-related deaths may be on the decline. Complete data has yet to be released, but provisional data from the CDC show an overall 3.2% decline in overdose deaths from September 2017 through September 2018.

These initial numbers suggest a victory stemming from White House-led efforts to combat the crisis, such as the creation of a commission to provide recommendations to the federal government, the declaration of a national public health emergency, the signing of a sweeping opioids package into law, and strong border security efforts.

However, many experts say the slight one-year decline doesn't constitute a concrete trend yet. And one point of concern for public health advocates is continued access to addiction treatment provided through the Affordable Care Act, which Trump wants to strike down.

As for Janelle, now sober for over a year, her focus is on hope at the individual level, the struggle for survival.

"I got a second chance at life," she said. "I absolutely love being sober. I get to spend quality time with my two girls and offer support to others in the Duluth area who are struggling with addiction."

If you or someone you know is affected by opioid addiction you can find resources at the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Administration 1-800-662-HELP (4357) final_desc_1 For the purposes of this study, Gallup created a composite article using existing news stories, in order to understand the factors that influence people's trust in news sources, including whether they are from a national news organization or local news organization, and the location of the story. We did vary whether the news organization came from Duluth, MN or from your local area, and whether it came from a local newspaper or a national newspaper.

The original articles included real information researched by real journalists. In other words, this was not a real news story but used real information compiled from multiple news stories. If you would like to read the original news stories, you can find them below.
